Chakra's energy deficiency as the main cause of infertility in women

Statement of the Problem: Female infertility is defined as an inability to conceive or carry a pregnancy to term after 12 months of unprotected intercourse or 6 months if the woman is over 35 years old. The purpose of this study is to demonstrate that infertility problems may be associated with Chakras energy deficiency, and deficiency of the massive organs in the Five Elements Theory, specially the Kidney's, which is the energy responsible for the reproduction.

Methodology: Two case reports of two women with infertility, with all laboratorial tests appearing normal. They were already trying to achieve pregnancy with in vitro fertilization. However, in the point of view of the energy of the chakras, all their chakras were depleted. They were treated with acupuncture, Chinese dietary counselling and treatment of the chakras' energy with homeopathy and crystal-based medication.

Findings: Both patients were able to achieve pregnancy only after the treatment with acupuncture, Chinese dietary nutrition and replenishment of the chakras' energy through homeopathy and crystal-based medication.

Conclusion: Normal laboratorial fertility exams do not mean absence of disease. It is important to study in the energy level, which is invisible to the naked eye. The corrections of the chakra's energy and the blood, leads to a more successful treatment. The corrections of the energy imbalances improves the blood production, responsible for the fetus nutrition, and tones the chakras, mainly the second, represented by the kidney's energy, leading to an improvement of the conception.
