Health protection challenge for developing countries: Informal health care service provider

Rafia Rahman

University of Dhaka, Bangladesh

Statement of Problem: Globally shortage of formal health service providers pushed people to seek health care from informal sectors as they are more socially and community focused.

Purpose of Study: To develop an effective, efficient health system to improve population health.

Methodology: Both Primary and secondary data was taken. Face to face interview and focus group discussion was done.

Findings: Irrespective of education and all income groups' house hold people choices to received health services from informal health care providers (IHCPs). Respondents also revealed that they visit them for all types of discomfort and disease.

Conclusion: It will stop incomplete medication.
